

SCIP Leaders Take a Tour With USTA Representative, Mr. Esu Ma 'at, at Columbia University

The Selective Corporate Internship Program has partnered up with the USTA to give our young leaders a chance to play tennis, as well as visit prestigious colleges. Many of us young leaders are starting to look into colleges, so the tours we took are vital to our college choices.

On August 17, 2012, the interns received a tour of Columbia University, an Ivy League school, in Manhattan, New York. Mr. Esu Ma'at led the young leaders on this tour in which he showed the interns the campus and took them to various halls, and important landmarks on campus. He also told the interns various facts and ideas about the college. Columbia University is one of the oldest university in New York State and the fifth oldest in the Nation being founded in 1754. When it was founded as Kings College and after the American Revolution it became state entity and was renamed Columbia College, and later Columbia University. It was originally an all Caucasian, all male school.

The Interns took a look at the architecture and beauty of the campus as Mr. Ma'at explained how the campus was designed to be symmetrical. Mr. Ma'at also showed the interns a statue known as Alta Mater, which was donated by the class of 1860. The young leaders were then taken inside one of the buildings where Mr. Ma'at gave the interns a presentation on the business side of sports. "It is very important that you understand that in sports, the athlete never makes the most money, someone has to sign those million dollar checks”, said Esu Ma’at. “Many people aren’t good enough to be the athlete, but you can work behind the scenes and make just as much”. “I believe the interns got that message”.
